Chapter 1 by sharon george

After a head injury, a man has an unusual problem: every time he falls asleep, he wakes up ten years in the past.

Chapter 2 by R

You'd think the worst part of it would be losing friends and family, being shot back to an unfamiliar time.

No, the worst part was that the sleep didn't even leave him rested.

He counted up the days in his mind in the seventies when he figured out what was going on. He'd already left the internet and air conditioning behind. about a month, he'd lose the toilet. In a year, he'd be in the times of Ancient Greece.

It would probably only be five or six years until society vanished before his eyes. Not that much longer before Homo sapiens disappeared as well.

He needed to cure this. Fast. Before there was no one left to fix him.

Chapter 3 by ArchAngel

In the 1850's, just 2 weeks after the Civil War, a man was found in a field, his head examined, and it was like being in the dark ages. Forget MRI scans, there weren't even X-rays.

As soon as he took a step forward, the wolves swept him up and carried him on their backs, howling with joy. They ran and ran, and against the mans better judgement he fell asleep.

When he woke up, he expected the wolves to be gone, he expected to have been abandoned by them as he took his difficult journey through time. But they were still there, panting and urging their legs onward as they headed toward some unknown destination.
